CLASS SONG.

*Farewell each tender tie, severed at last,
Ends never satisfy thoughts of the past,
Into each life is thrown more of earth's duty,
Out of each heart is gone some of its beauty.*

*But ways of companions are not as our own,
Fate points us to follow the line she has thrown,
One scene cannot tell all the life that we live,
One act never shows all that time has to give.*

*But what shall compensate each life for its loss,
While knowing our pathways may never recross?
Yet hands will remember, and hearts not forget,
But look back with joy to this hour of regret.*

*Hands unclasp here to-day; voices of pain
Tell us we never may grasp them again.
Midst the glad days that will never return,
The whiteness of this one forever will burn.*
