Fear
Marilyn Windau

Fear takes small jelly jars,
empties out the sweetness of fruit,
fits himself in,
fills himself to the brim,
evendons a convex cap,
just to gain your attention,
just so you know he's fully capable
of overflowing, of flooding,
of saturating.

Fear goes unmasked.
Contrary to popular belief,
he needs no ghostly pallor,
no bloodshot eye.
He needs no knife to sever calm.
Fear is a hawker
of "make your own scar,"
"do it yourself shakes,"
"shiver your own timbers."

Fear doesn't sleep.
He lurks in the hallways
of night dreams.
His mares whinny at 2, at 3.
Flannel sheets,
binky comforts,
are no match for fear.
Only silent outbursts of “No”
can wax-seal and shelve him.
