Amanda,

What is the goal that you have set for yourself? Put more feeling into what you wanted to accomplish, and why you wanted to do this. Then go on and explain how your aunt Carolyn helped you. That could be how you begin your paper. The questions you ask are very good, but you do not give much support to them. They are just there. Now you don’t have to answer all the questions that you put in your paper, but try to answer at least one. Keep the question at the beginning. Then go ahead and play with it. What does the Oxford dictionary say a job is... and then go on and tell what you think a job is. Contradict the two different definitions that you are giving. In the last paragraph you focus on your aunt. That is very nice of you, but I don’t know your aunt and I want to learn more about you. Scrap the last paragraph and tell me what you learned from this. Ask questions like what is the real definition of a job? Will this job really suit me or will I want to do something else after I learn about nursing? You can put a few things in about you aunt and how you can thank her, but explain why. Ask something like where would I be or what would I be doing if it were not for my aunt? Make these statements into questions.

2. The first paragraph is good, but you talk about your aunt and what she does. That is okay for some of it but I want to hear about you. What made you want to be a nurse so bad? What story leads you to that place? In second paragraph I like that first sentence, but then go on and tell us what you think nursing will be. Do you question your own faith, and is this a way that you will take to find out your faith? Why do u strongly believe in the Christian faith? Third paragraph is getting more into what you want, and what you think. This paragraph could use some more of your feelings in it. The fifth paragraph you again talk about you aunt story and not yours. Did that baby prove to you that you wanted be a nurse?

3. The meat of your paper is in the third and fourth paragraphs. This is what got my attention because I thought that here I would learn more about why you have chosen you paper. I say you should go back through the paper and underline everything that you have said about yourself. You will see that there is not to much information in there. Then go through it again with another color and highlight everything you have said about your aunt you will see that there is a lot more about her story in here then yours. Do tell us more about yourself.

4. Amanda USE COMPLEXITY!!!!! You start off with great question, and then you just kind of stop asking them. You cannot tell me that when you were writing this paper that thousands of questions did not run through your head about your life. Put those in here. Examples of questions would be things like: What is nursing, why is this right for me, why did my aunt choose this, what difference do I want to make in this world, do you want a family, want kind of nurse do you want to be, do you like death or kind it interesting, what draws you to the hospitals, how old were you when you knew you wanted to do this, most important. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE STORY?

5. While reading through this paper I found a lot out about your aunt, and not too much about how you have come to understand her. I have stressed that fact through this whole review. Use some of the questions that I have given you to get the wheels turning and that should do it.
